Implicit biases influence how people interact with others. Generally, these individual and often unrealized perspectives are not harmful, but in the framework of the jail environment, how leaders and officers perceive each other, and the inmate population they manage, could undermine public safety. Avoiding adverse outcomes is possible if jail practitioners educate themselves on implicit bias.